Investment Proposition

The Fund invests in an actively managed portfolio of stocks from around the world with the intention of delivering significantly higher total returns than the MSCI ACWI Index. We focus on companies which we believe offer above average profit growth and we invest with a long-term (5 year) perspective. The Fund's three dedicated investment managers draw on a combination of their own investment ideas and those of our various investment teams to produce a portfolio that typically holds 70-120 stocks.

Some stocks may only have been held for part of the period.

A hundred years ago, the world was emerging from the trauma of the First World War and the influenza pandemic which followed. Societies in North America and Europe proved keen to put these years of hardship behind them and embrace a future with greater social freedoms and wondrous new technologies. Exponential growth in the deployment and availability of cars, telephones, films, radio and electrical goods fundamentally changed how people ate, travelled, communicated and entertained themselves. Advances in medical practices, developed rapidly in response to the human carnage on the battlefield, meant decades of healthcare progress were compressed into a few years. The future shone with promise. Although not on the same scale as events a century ago, might the recovery from the more recent pandemic, gradual and uneven though it is, trigger a similar sense of liberation and possibility? New technologies are changing the fabric of our economy and consumers appear eager to enjoy new freedoms.

Contributing positively to performance over the quarter was Boston-based biotech company Moderna, as clear an example of a company using new technology to open up new possibilities, in this case developing therapies based on 'messenger RNA' (mRNA). Moderna hit the headlines late last year as one of the three providers of a promised vaccine against COVID-19. However, the opportunity for Moderna goes far beyond this. Moderna's mRNA technology targets the production of proteins in the body directly, addressing all illnesses that result from the over or under-expression of proteins. This opens up an enormous opportunity set over the long term as Moderna aims to address the 'big four' killers – autoimmune disease, cardiovascular disease, cancer and infectious disease. Recent share price strength reflected the continued roll out of Moderna's vaccine across different regions, including the granting of an emergency permit for use in India, as well as new research showing the vaccine to be effective against emerging variants of Covid-19. We have been heartened by the way in which the company continues to adapt and evolve their vaccine to address new mutations of the virus.

Also contributing to performance over the quarter was ecommerce enabler Shopify, which provides the software to power a host of backend functions for companies seeking to transact online. It provides everything from website and sales channel management (e.g. Instagram, Facebook, Pinterest etc.) to payments, inventory management and tracking. Shopify also encourages an 'ecosystem' of third-party developers to build tools for the Shopify system which its customers can add on. The pandemic led to offline businesses scrambling to get online which benefited Shopify and, encouragingly, we've seen strong operational performance continue even as bricks and mortar retail reopened as lockdowns have eased in various parts of the world, with the more recent results showing revenues more than doubling versus the prior year. Our blue-sky case is predicated on Shopify's addressable opportunity continuing to grow over the next decade as they develop more tools and products to address larger parts of the value chain and the potential for rising margins if Shopify can increase their take rate.

In contrast, shares in South African technology investment holding company Naspers detracted from performance following the announcement that recent spin-out Prosus (also held in the Fund) will issue new shares to buy 45% of Naspers shares. Despite a world-class investment record over the past two decades, Naspers shares have been trading at a substantial discount to the value of underlying assets. This deal is part of an effort to narrow the discount to NAV which we currently estimate to be around 50% on a sum-of-the-parts basis. Despite the complex resulting structure we believe the step is fair and thoughtful and supports the unlocking of long-term shareholder value. The value in Prosus, and thus Naspers, is underpinned by the 30% stake in Tencent, the Chinese gaming, social media and payments company and we remain enthused about the future growth in its mobile gaming platform, advertising, computing and fintech. We also believe that many of the other companies in the Naspers stable (especially those in food delivery, payment and education) are likely to be long term beneficiaries of the structural trends which have been accelerated by the coronavirus.

Also detracting from performance were shares in Ping An Insurance, the Chinese insurance giant. This weakness reflected both muted recent profit growth which disappointed investors who expected a stronger recovery from the impact of pandemic in Asia. Despite recent challenges, we remain optimistic about the longer term opportunity for Ping An, in particular, the drive to conduct more of its business digitally through heavy investment in technology, and the value that lies in other financial offerings such as Ping An Bank and Ping An Good Doctor (also held in the portfolio).

With the Worldwide Global Alpha Fund having had a somewhat exceptional period of performance since the onset of the pandemic, it is quite possible that this reverses for a period. If this is the case, we will not let this distract us from our core task of the identification and patient, engaged ownership of great businesses. The greater risk to the fund is not that value has a sustained period of outperformance over growth, or that our style of investing goes out of favour for a while. It is, as one of our colleagues at Baillie Gifford put it, that we fall prey to the perennial temptation of 'distraction through seeking minor opportunities in banal companies over short periods'. We will remain disciplined and continue to seek out businesses that have the potential to reliably grow their earnings at attractive rates over long periods of time and where this potential isn't well understood by the market.

New Purchases

Stock Name	Transaction Rationale
Carvana	Carvana is the leading player in the US online used car market. We are excited by the tremendous market opportunity as the used car industry has just started moving online. The market is currently fragmented but we believe the shift to online will favour only a few players, including Carvana. Their vertically integrated business model is radically different to traditional car dealerships and we believe that it will improve the car buying experience and lower prices for consumers. Further, we expect Carvana's consumer-centric culture and skill in data-driven customer acquisition will help it build a strong brand and steadily grab market share. We don't think the current valuation reflects Carvana's growth potential, therefore we decided to take a holding.
Li Auto ADR	Li Auto is a Chinese electric vehicle ('EV') manufacturer with aspirations to become one of the leading players in the electrification of the global automobile market. The company's strategy is focused on addressing the two largest concerns facing consumers when looking to switch to an EV, namely range anxiety and cost. Li Auto's first model, the Li One, has an internal combustion engine, which exists solely to provide additional charge to the electric batteries, resulting in best in class range. The resulting ability to run with smaller battery packs than rival manufacturers also helps keep costs low, translating into lower prices for customers and impressive gross margins. We admire the vision and entrepreneurialism of founder Li Xiang and believe that Li Auto is one of the few EV companies in the world which truly understands both the radical implications of the shift to EVs and the rising importance of software. As such we have taken a new holding for the Fund.
Staar Surgical	Staar Surgical is a developer of vision correcting implantable lenses. The company's technology remains industry-leading, yet historically it has lacked robust and consistent marketing, thereby allowing laser vision correction to become the 'default' treatment despite significant limitations. With a new management team installed at the company we are enthused by the prospect of a great product being marketed much more strategically and are excited by the significant recent growth the company has achieved (particularly in Asia, where the incidence of myopia is high). The research and development initiatives at the company interest us too, specifically its development of a presbyopic lens (a lens for treatment of age-related lens deterioration which affects near sight and is usually treated with reading glasses).

Stock Name	Transaction Rationale
Interactive Brokers Group	Interactive Brokers is an online discount stockbroker which provides a platform for active traders and institutional investors. Our investment case was based on the company's compelling combination of low cost and technology leadership, but our conviction in both factors has weakened due to, for example, rising competition from 'commission-free' rivals such as Robinhood. In addition, although we have historically viewed the founder's controlling stake in the firm to be a net positive, this has meant that minority shareholders struggle to have a voice in the company's development. A combination of these issues led to our decision to sell.
SoftBank Group	We have decided to sell the position in Japanese holding company SoftBank. Having only purchased the business in February of 2020, this represents an unusually short holding period for Global Alpha. The investment case was based on two interconnected factors: a more disciplined approach to the use of capital and the potential for a narrowing of the discount to the value of the underlying investments, dominated by the stake in Chinese ecommerce giant, Alibaba. These factors have largely played out as we might have hoped, with CEO Masayoshi Son having initially focused on realising the value of companies in the portfolio, returning cash to shareholders and hence narrowing the discount. However, as the incentive towards discipline created at the start of the pandemic has dissipated, we have started to see questions return with regards to the quality of the corporate governance at SoftBank. With our ability to engage meaningfully with the company on this topic limited and the discount substantially smaller than when we first invested, we have decided to move on.
